Writer's Reflection

The notebook entry I chose to publish was about My old pillow and how I used to love it but now I just keep it on my shelf

As I drafted and developed the idea, I realized that what I was really trying to say was that as you get older the things you love change

The craft strategy I used to lift the quality of my writing was Using lists to help slow down my writing to give examples of what I did with each of the things I loved

My favorite part of this piece is "I used to spend hours building castles for my toy soldiers, wagons to carry my lego people and imaginary space stations that I imagined one day I'd travel to"

It is my favorite part because it really shows all the ways I used my legos and how much I enjoyed them

One thing I have learned about good writing that I will apply to all my future writing is

To think about what you are really trying to say before you begin to organize your ideas
