

Lots of kids hate spending time with older people. They think they don't know about things that are happening today. Just because they don't like rap songs or the same movies or t.v. shows we do, they never want to spend any time with them, even if they are their grandparents. Sometimes I wonder if young people are missing something from not spending ^{more} time with older people. My grandpa was in the war and I don't know anything from his experiences. I wish he could talk to me about it. I think I could learn a lot from him. My grandma used to knit things for the whole family and some of my friends are taking knitting club. I can't because I go to chess. Maybe I can ask my grandma to teach me how to knit. I bet she would if she knew I wanted to. You never know until you ask.

Josh's writing after reading "My Grandmother's Hair."