

Part 1. Reading Patrick Slattery

Your response to question #1 is due in class, on paper on Thursday April 10.

We'll have a presentation by Group #4 on Tuesday April 8.

Read Patrick Slattery "The Argumentative, Multiple-Source Paper: College Students Reading Thinking, and Writing from Divergent Points of View" 1991--361-377—in Timothy Barnett. Refer to Slattery's ideas and then, using the last research project you can remember working on (or are currently working on), describe your approach to the research. Is it "dogmatic," "Noncommittal," or "Analytical," or some combination of these? Why? Use specific examples. This response attempts to identify ways you usually read and include sources in your argumentative research papers.
