Connecting Life Experiences to Life Truths

Students need time to reflect on their experiences to understand why the experiences stand out in their memories, what makes them important, and what they learned or how they changed as a result. The graphic organizer on page 148 gives students a way to sort through those experiences and understand their impact on themselves and others.

WRITE ABOUT A TIME WHEN YOU DID THE WRONG THING.
- THE DARE (Mrs. Henderson)

Michael gave me the dare.
I got up and went to do the dare.
I asked the question.
All the class laughed.

Michael got sent out.
He comes back in.
I got in trouble the next day.

The dare -
1. Where was I?
2. What was I doing?
3. I was in a room.
4. I was in a room.
5. I was in a room.
6. What happened yesterday?
7. I got in trouble.
8. The class laughed.

Revision Stations

Revision Station 1: Snapshot Challenge
1. Look at your sentence.
2. Imagine that you’re looking at a photograph (or snapshot) taken at that moment.
3. Use words to describe everything you can see in the snapshot.

Revision Station 2: Senses Challenge
1. Look at your sentence.
2. Write details to show every one of the senses:
   ➔ What did you see?
   ➔ What did you feel?
   ➔ What did you hear?
   ➔ What did you taste?
   ➔ What did you smell?

Revision Station 3: Thoughtshot Challenge
1. Look at your sentence.
2. Imagine that people could hear everything you were thinking at that moment.
3. Write down everything that went through your head, everything you thought right then.

Revision Station 4: Dialogue Challenge
1. Look at your sentence.
2. Imagine all of the conversation that went on at that moment.
3. Write down everything everyone said.

Revision Station 5: Ba-da-bing Challenge
1. Look at your sentence.
2. Write one Ba-da-bing sentence for that moment, with these three parts:

   Where your feet were right then
   What your eye saw right then
   What you thought right then
Cause and Effect (If . . . Then . . .)

CAUSE: You didn’t use the flipbook correctly

IF...

- You don’t put the sequence of events with actions, (not thoughts or feelings) on your flips to organize your writing.
- You don’t write “Where am I? What am I doing?” on the first flip so that when you begin writing, your FEET ARE ON THE GROUND inside the experience.
- You don’t set up your flipbook so that, page by page, you are showing what happened next so that you can also show how you reacted to what happened next.
- Before you started filling out the flipbook, you don’t figure out and write down —on the FRONT COVER— what your point is for writing about this experience.
- You convince yourself that the flipbook is a waste of your time. You set it up half-heartedly to please the teacher.

THEN...

- Your writing will become more and more vague and repetitive. You’ll run out of anything to say.
- You don’t know how to start, so your first paragraph is often vague and confusing. Then, you have a hard time getting started with writing the experience.
- Your writing, by the third or fourth flip, will start to repeat. Since nothing new is happening, there’s no new reaction . . . so you repeat what you’ve already said.
- Your writing has no focus, no undercurrent of purpose, to guide it. After reading it, one could ask: “Point? So what? Who’s to care?”
- Your half-hearted flipbook leads to half-hearted writing that wanders confusingly from sentence to sentence.

EFFECT: Your writing becomes unfocused, confusing, vague, and repetitive. In a word: boring.

Student Self-Check Flipbook

Self-Check: These Are the ABSOLUTE Requirements

___1. I wrote the prompt down on the cover.
___2. I made a list of at least five experiences that show this.
___3. I wrote down what experience I chose to write about at the top of the back page.
___4. This planning lasted only fifteen to thirty minutes. No longer.
___5. I listed the things that happened (kernel essay) on the back of my flipbook.
___6. I moved that list to the flips on the front.
___7. I wrote Where am I? What am I doing? at the top of the first page . . . ONLY.
___8. I answered these two questions clearly before I wrote anything else on the first inside page.
___9. I am writing SIX OR MORE sentences on each inside page in TRIPLE SLOW MOTION, carefully connecting experience to the prompt.

Scoring Guide

Score Point 1
Because of the way you have written this, it is too hard to read and clearly understand. There are problems with punctuation, spelling, proper grammar, and so on. There is also a problem with you repeating the same thing too much. It’s hard to tell that you read the prompt and are focused on what it says.

I didn’t get the feeling, as I read your paper, that you really cared whether you did a good job writing or not. Let’s work on that.

Score Point 2
I can usually follow and understand the experience you are writing about—although there are places where I got lost. There are too many problems with run-ons, capitalization, and spelling.

There are also problems with repeating and with this sounding more like a list of what happened instead of an explanation and showing of it. I often needed to reread and try to figure out what you had written . . . or what you had probably meant to write.

Score Point 3
Your paper was basically clear from beginning to end. While there were some problems with correct punctuation and spelling, these did not keep me from being able to easily read and understand what you wrote. You shared your reactions and thoughts consistently. Some observations were uniquely exceptional. Your ending was clear and appropriate to your focus. If you had proofread (more) carefully, most of the errors could have been corrected.

Score Point 4
Your writing captured me from the beginning. Where you were, I was. What you saw, I saw. What you thought and felt, I could understand and identify with. Your language skills added both clarity and meaning to your writing.

My first thought when I finished reading your paper was, “Wow! I hope I can have a copy of this!” Thank you for taking the time and effort to produce writing of this quality.

Writer’s Toolbox

Similes

...a hotel that looked like a palace in one of those royalty movies. (Desiree M.)

Bada-bing

When I stepped into the classroom and noticed that Angelas desk was empty, I wondered what happened. (Raymond C.)

Dialogue

“What’s that big net for, Jamie?” I curiously asked. “Lulu is loose somewhere in the store.” (Anna M.)

Sparkling Sentences

It’s hard because I think one thing and then another. (Julio T.)

Haha, get that nine to five, baby bro. (Carlos T.)

Truisms

You don’t always have to have the best to make you feel whole inside. (Dustin H.)
Minilesson

Anna Matthias, The Bunny Escape, p. 130

Type of Minilesson: Sensory Words

Writers don’t use every strategy they know all the time. They pick and choose whatever works best for each situation.

Anna treats her readers to a masterful flurry of noise, not from beginning to end, but just when the story truly gets noisy.

ACTIVITY:
- Read the piece.
- Highlight the words and phrases that bring sounds to a reader’s imaginary ear.
  Notice where those words and phrases are concentrated.

Examples: thrash, squeaking, squawking, screeching, crowing, whistling, whispered.

CHALLENGE: Find (or build) a moment in your own writing where there’s a sensory flurry. Add enough sensory words so that a reader’s imaginary senses feel it.

Noah Alonzo, A Time to Help: Little Hero, p. 132

Type of Minilesson: Dialogue Limitation

Writers combine dialogue with action.

Noah gracefully combines speech between two people with action all around both.

ACTIVITY:
Look at the fourth paragraph. Here’s Noah’s pattern:

Speech—speaker 1
Speech—speaker 2
Action
Speech—speaker 1
Action

CHALLENGE: Try inserting a pattern just like that into your own writing.
Minilessons

Uriel Garcia, Ironing, p. 133

Type of Minilesson: Layering Thinking

Writers let us inside their heads, telling us their thoughts as events happen. Uriel uses remarkable inner speech, adding layers of thinking to his actions.

ACTIVITY:
Find a simple action sentence in your writing.
Ask yourself these questions, weaving the answers into your writing:
- What was I wondering?
- What did I think would happen?
- What were the only things I knew right then?
- For a second, what did I think?
Read Uriel's third paragraph to see where the questions come from.

CHALLENGE: Try using mental questions like these on your next piece.

Megan Weimorts, Mittens, p. 135

Type of Minilesson: Blending Sentence Functions

To tell a story, writers use mixtures of speaking, thinking, viewing, and doing. Megan skillfully blends these four kinds of writing in her piece, leaving readers perfectly clear about the whole memory.

ACTIVITY:
- This highlighting can be done by groups.
  Yellow: everything the narrator thought
  Blue: everything the narrator saw
  Pink: everything that anyone said
  Green: all the action (not counting thinking or talking)
Share and compare what you notice.

CHALLENGE: Highlight something you've written in the same way, just to take a look at your own patterns.
